Manpower Inc. Chairman and CEO Jeff Joerres Recognized as One of the "Guys Who Get It"

MILWAUKEE (22 March 2010) - Manpower Inc. (NYSE: MAN), a world leader in employment services, announced today that Manpower Inc. Chairman and CEO Jeff Joerres has been named as one of the InterOrganization Network's (ION) 11 "Guys Who Get it," CEOs or board chairman who understand the value of diversity at the top.

"These men, all highly influential business leaders, were chosen because they have demonstrated a clear understanding of the business case for diverse leadership. They are impressive role models for corporate executives looking to diversify their own leadership teams," said ION President Rona Wells.

ION's release of its sixth annual report on the status of women directors and executive officers found that the low number of women directors and executive officers in U.S. public companies has varied little over the last few years. Research for the report was provided by ION's 14 member organizations located across the U.S. The statistics go beyond examining the status of women in the largest U.S. public companies to include businesses that comprise the backbone of these regional economies.

"We now have so many key positions that are filled by women that I no longer think of it as diversity," said Joerres. "It's become a part of what we are as a company, which is satisfying."

Five of Manpower's 13 leading executives are women, as are 40 percent of the organization's country managers. In 2009, Manpower was named to PINK magazine's prestigious list of "Top Companies for Women" for the second consecutive year, recognizing companies who are committed to advancing in the workplace. While Manpower continues to blaze a trail in increasing the representation of women in top leadership positions, other companies' efforts are falling short.

"This year's report provides a comprehensive picture of a bleak landscape ripe for change," Wells said. "Too many companies remain mired in the past. Business leaders must look beyond their traditional networks and resources to build teams that include women and people of color."

To accelerate this effort, ION is taking steps to assist companies interested in modernizing their nominating committee charters and board selection processes. In addition to publicizing the existence of a significant pool of accomplished women available and qualified to serve on corporate boards, ION provides women with a national voice and forum for exchanging ideas and best practices.
